Random silliness.

It's a Sandra Boynton book, so it's almost not worth reviewing. You know it's going to be 5 stars. However, this Boynton book stands out enough from the already-exalted pack that I think it's worth a review.

Basically it's a poem of animals and the sounds they make. "A cow says moo, a sheep says baa" until you get to the surprising line "three singing pigs say la la la." Hilarity ensues. Really!

Like all Boynton books, it's rhythmic so my son enjoys the narrative, and he can participate in the reading by supplying the animal sounds as we go. The illustrations are colorful enough to grab his attention, but simple enough that he can point out different animals and the different parts of the animals. The final page of the book has all the animals together, and he spends the most time on this page pointing out the various animals and making their corresponding noises.

If nothing else, this book is worth checking out just to listen to the other adults in your life act out the crazy animal sounds. We have a weekly dinner with our extended family, and my son loves to make the rounds and have every adult present read the story with him. It's pretty great to hear your older brother act out "rhinoceroses snort and snuffle."

A fun little story about animal noises.

Samantha says

Love. One of my favorites.

Aneesa says

If Everly tries to tell me that singing pigs say "Oink" instead of "La la la" we're going to have a serious talk.

My wife and I consider Moo, Baa, La La La to be our daughter Charlotte's first favourite book. There was a point in time, not so long ago, when the only sounds that would calm her down in the evening (or on a bad car ride, or after a fall, or any other general sookfest) were my wife or I reciting this book. Now that Charlotte's a little bit older (15 months at the time of this writing) she still loves the book, and has taken to finishing the sentences as we read along (or recite from memory).

Our version is a 5 inch square board book. It's also available in a much larger version, about 12 inches square, but the 5 inch version is still quite sturdy. Sandra Boynton once again uses her recognizable style of illustration, drawing bold, colourful animals on plain, solid colour backgrounds. This works very well, making it simple for young eyes to pick out the animals and point to them happily and proudly.

My first impressions of this, and most other books by Sandra Boynton, were actually pretty poor. I hadn't had any experience with them when I was younger, so I didn't really much care for them. But as you soon learn as a parent, if it makes your child happy, that's pretty much all that matters. This was the first book that Charlotte would respond to, reach for, and eventually carry along as she crawled across the floor to us. It holds a very special place in our hearts now. After over a year of steady reading, we have had to retire our copy. Sturdy or not, babies are hard on books, and we really want to keep this one in tact. We'll probably be picking it up again, the next time we see it.

Samantha Penrose says

This book has cute illustrations and introduces kids to animals and the sounds that they make. Sturdy and fun.

Tatiana says

Nothing has made my baby smile and laugh so far as much as this book.

Make the sounds that you are supposed to make! Reminded me of a kind of Animal Farm for small children - but with no political message. Sandra Boynton always comes through with fun books that teach important lessons.

Ed Mcfadden says

A moving narrative that highlights the circle of life in understandable, free-market terms while placing a sunnier patina on the darker side of the meat and poultry industry.

I read this book aloud several times a day to babies and toddlers! I have it memorized; I can grunt this animal noise poem on command. And I'm getting better giving classes (yes classes?!) to drooling, curious babes, some who can't even sit up on their own. You'd be amazed how under 1 year olds can and will sit in a circle and pay attention and interact. We certainly have to keep busy on the 10 1/2 hour nursery shift.

"Moooo, says the cow. Baaa, says the sheep. La, la, la, says three singing pigs. No, no, you say, that isn't right. The pigs say, Oink, all day and night. Rhinosauruses Snort and Snuff. And little dogs say Ruff, Ruff, Ruff! Other dogs say BOW, WOW, WOW, and cats and kittens say Meow. The duck says Quack, the horse says Neigh. It's quiet now..what do You say?" -SB

My bf told me of a study that humans can instinctively learn how to make animal sounds and have used it to their advantage, for example, to hunt down prey. I find it funny that we still teach our babies animal sounds, though these city kids do not come in contact with most of these animals ever. It's still cute to make weird noises with babies, and to talk about talking-

"It's quiet now-what do YOU say?"

This is her absolute favourite book right now. She giggles all the way through it. I have the whole thing memorized.
