Overall, a great RPG story. Share it to those love Games, and a bit of China taste in the environment setting.

This is easily the best volume so far. As a series, I've been a little iffy on this one. I haven't truly warmed up to the characters and it very much is a boy's coming of age but this volume started pulling all the threads together (and I have to wonder if this will be a relatively short series).

Taitou is finally coming into his powers and his responsibilities, even though it's making for tension between him and Laila (which I'm sort of hoping doesn't get shippy now that they know they're not actually brother and sister). They have to deal with Ryuukou's betrayal and his return as well.

As for his part, Ryuukou has done some things that cannot be undone and are close to unhinging him. In the meantime, Keirou has seized power and may, in fact, murder the emperor since he no longer needs him. This volume is taut and full of twists, including one I didn't see coming (and makes me think if you're a joker in anything Arakawa does, you may be in trouble). Big changes for everyone but especially Housei, Ryuukou and Taitou.

I have clicked the square beside the words Hide entire review because of spoilers but anyway SPOILER ALERT! This volume does not hold back on the death. Wow two main characters Housei and Shimei killed within pages of each and I say killed even with that bit with the grave at the end. It is like so many Kung Fu movies in existence I cannot name one specific one because when you have seen so many as me they all blend together.
