Into the Fire Alexander Fullerton

Summer 1943; an undercover mission to occupied France...

Rosie Ewing is an agent of SOE – Special Operations Executive – and a ‘pianist’: Resistance slang for radio operator. Their average life expectancy is six weeks.

But Rosie is brighter than most, well-aware of the consequences of a second’s carelessness, or bad luck, or treachery. Or a fellow agent crumbling under torture, naming names.

Her brief is to set up a new network in Rouen, where the old one has been blown and an agent is suspected of betrayal. If she gets there, that is. Landing from a gunboat on the Brittany coast, she must travel to Paris – carrying forged papers, a radio transceiver and more than a million francs in cash...

Frighteningly realistic, unbearably exciting, the Rosie Ewing Spy Thrillers are perfect for fans of Philip Kerr, Ian Fleming and John Le Carré.

‘You don’t read a novel by Alexander Fullerton. You live it.’ South Wales Echo

Mike Whitehouse says

A good start to a series.

Certainly a good start to a series which can only get better as Rosie Learns her craft as an agent of British Intelligence.

Nicki says

Newly-widowed Rosie offers her services to SOE as a field agent and finds herself in Northern France, helping to set up a new network after the collapse of the previous one.

I like Rosie as a character, but she seems far too trusting to me as a secret agent in an occupied country. She takes precautions in lots of instances and then completely trusts the wrong person, despite the strange questions and requests to put everything in writing. This isn't her first mission in the field either, which makes it even stranger that she doesn't smell a rat sooner. Or perhaps I'd have been a lot more paranoid in her situation!

The book has exciting moments and a sub-plot involving Rosie's love interest, an Australian in the Royal Navy. It's the first in a series and I'll definitely pick up the next one at some point.
