Elizabeth says

How to write a book report in four hours. Step one: go to large book store chain outlet. Step two: read this book while pretending to browse. Step three: replace this book on shelf and buy a book by an author you like. Step four: go home. Step five: turn on computer and press the buttons with letters on them (otherwise known as a keyboard). Step five: hand in book report (and this is key) with a neutral smile at teacher that says: "yes I did not read the book, and you can probably tell from this book report, but I want you to know that I know that you know..."

Beyond Comprehensive

Love the format and easy-to-digest portions of information. This will really help my 9th grader get through Lord of the Flies.

Carol says

I reserved this book because I was going to see the show at Round House Theatre and had never read the book. I glanced through it and got an idea of the story before seeing the show. Now I don't think I will read it.

Joodi says

It really makes the novel easy to study.

James Carter says

CliffsNotes: Lord of the Flies got me through the dreadful bore of a novel, understanding it a bit better.

However, the summary of each chapter was too brief, and the author went forever in the analysis.

For whatever it was worth, CliffsNotes: Lord of the Flies was a good idea.

Maria says

If looking to take a critical look at books: read Cliffsnotes. If wanting to read for fun: do not read Cliffsnotes.
