Swing era Germany. A young Leni Riefenstahl is acclaimed as the greatest female filmmaker of the 20th century. Dancer, actor, screenwriter, and director, she is renowned as a consummate artist. Then come the atrocities of the Third Reich and suddenly she is dismissed and despised as a Nazi whore. Tiefland is a fictionalized account of her struggle to restore her reputation and her desperate attempt to regain the adoration she once enjoyed.

Calvin Glover nudges the envelope of historical fiction. Drawing heavily from Leni Riefenstahl: A Memoir, several biographies that stake out conflicting viewpoints, and archival news accounts of the day, he has fashioned Tiefland as a dramatic metaphor. It is a literary collage mixing fact and fiction to create a fascinating portrayal of a complex, famous, and notorious woman.

Clivemichael says

Interesting, somewhat choppy, rambling account with occasional clear writing, enough of which to carry one through to the end.

Linda Marie Marsh says

I love reading historical fiction as well as history, I love learning, seeing new aspects as i get involved in the storyline. And in this fictionalized story of a time in the the post WW2 life of Leni Riefenstahl, i did just that! I guarantee that it's written unlike any other account of her life...intriguing to say the least with a twist at the end.

Initially it did seem to be somewhat disjointed, but once you get used to the writing style of the author you'll appreciate the time spent reading TIEFLAND.

Dani Rustem says

This book is an interesting mix of fact and historical fiction. It gives a unique look at Hitler's inner circle and keeps you hooked until the last page.
