In My World Chuck Aardema

Can you imagine a world where whales climb trees and monkeys have feathers? What about horses that crow first thing in the morning or groundhogs that sing? Can you picture tall purple dandelions that grow like trees - or kids with wings flying high in the sky?

In this world, imaginations run wild with delight as illustrations present familiar things in very unusual ways. Every image has colorful surprises designed to inspire children to picture the world around them in a new way.

Whimsical and fun, this children's tale depicts a world in which animals, plants, insects, and people behave and look very differently from what we know.

In my world, the cows are blue and puppies moo and rhinos lay the eggs.

All the young fish walk to school and snakes have short red legs.

I won a final copy of this book via a Goodreads Giveaway, thank you for your generosity!

Beautifully written and illustrated! I enjoy how this book encourages creative thinking and original thought; depicting the way in which things are versus the way in which they Could be.

My favorite was the math page, where 'one is six and six is one'. This could be a fun classroom activity to show kids how operations of numbers would be manipulated if the values of those known constants were reversed or changed (i.e. 6 replaced with 3, exc.).

This is a fabulous read aloud that introduces the reader to a world of possibilities and imagination! Giggles, laughter erupted when children listened to the story ... everyone was totally engaged. Vivid strong colourful illustrations totally capture the delightful playful mood of this read aloud!

I highly recommend this book be in every school and public library!
