All by herself!

Trudy Pomerantz says

A pleasant read for preschoolers.

Jaeger Matthias says that poppleton in spring poppleton decided to sleep outside in a tent his friends thought he was silly

Clacie says

For some reason, Jesse loves books with pigs. I thought he might say that he was too old for this book when I started reading it to him, but listened the whole time and didn't say anything negative.

Kimberly says

Awwww, these are so cute! Poppleton's reaction to the bike store is how I feel whenever I'm in a baby store. Too many choices and I want to run out screaming! :)

Jonathan Chew says

Fun collection of stories introducing the world of Poppleton and his friends - kinda like Winnie the Pooh but with farm animals!

Rylant writes about activities and problems that are relatable for most young children (riding a bike, being afraid of the dark, etc.). This chapter book series is perfect for emergent readers. My favorite chapter in this book is "Spring Cleaning." Poppleton cleans out some of his things he isn't using. He has a hard time parting with his beloved treasures so he asks his friend, Cherry Sue, to store them for him. When he takes his belongings up to Cherry Sue's attic, Poppleton finds some delightful items that Cherry Sue has been storing just a little too hard to resist. He ends up taking about as many things home from Cherry Sue's attic as he took over there to store. This chapter reminds me of my dear, sweet husband!

Denise says

This is a level three beginning reader book intended to introduce children to inspiring and information-based stories. There are three stories with simple-to-follow plot lines all about the same character, Poppleton the pig. The reader will see a rather static character in Poppleton, but I think the lack of depth is appropriate for the intended reader. I think the stories are relatable to children, but I wouldn't go so far as to consider it inspiring.

The Brothers says

A fun series of stories about a pig doing spring cleaning, going out to buy a bike, and camping in his back yard. I especially liked how he went running screaming from the bike store when he was overwhelmed by all the choices. For example:

"Great," said Marsha (after Poppleton had finally picked out the bike he wanted). "What color?"

"Red," croaked Poppleton.

"What kind of red?" asked Marsha.

"Red red," croaked Poppleton.

"We have fifteen different kinds of red," said Marsha. "Let me show you."

"NOOOOOOOO!!!!!" screamed Poppleton.

Excellent illustrations.

digable. cherry sue!

Alaina Sloo says

I have not yet met a young child who doesn't love Poppleton (although I'm sure there must be some somewhere). Sweet stories about Poppleton and his friends for early readers that also work well read aloud to younger children.

Keeko says

I heard about this from the actress, Mary Louise Parker, when she was doing an TV interview. She said that she and her kids read the author's books together at bedtime. I was curious, so I checked it out, and I'm so glad I did because it's one of those children's books that really is written for kids, and the humor is so clever and sweet that adults will be pleasantly surprised and love Poppleton and his friends too.

Randy Lynn says

This is one of Emma Kate's and my favorite bedtime stories!

Henry says

MCL. Poppleton did not get a bike.
