Madeline McAllan says

There definitely seems to be a bigger story fleshing out, however I'm not keen on the supernatural turn the series is taking (big monsters are not as interesting as the human, psychological conflict Johnny experiences, in my opinion). There are some supporting characters that have come to the foreground, two in particular, but they don't intrigue me as well as Johnny's character, making this issue quite boring to read. On that note, please bring back NNY!!!!

I'm hopeful the next two issues take a turn for the better.

Maria Skyllas says

After reading #4, I was hoping for Johnny to come back in full force. That wish wasn't fulfilled in #5. I wasn't too crazy about the giant monster. This is the issue I enjoyed the least, but I was still entertained. I liked seeing things from the victims' perspective.

Please bring Johnny back! As crazy as before!

I love that there is more insight on the other characters! More squee please!!!

Joseph Gagnon says

One of two things are happening right now. Either I am getting "dumber" as I read these comics, or they get

SO MUCH better as they go on. This issue had even MORE continuity than the last one ... almost to the point where I want to re-read the first few issues again ... almost. I guess there could be a third thing that could be happening here. Sometimes, I don't like something at first, but the more I am exposed to it, the more I start to understand it, and then come to enjoy it. For now, I am standing by my assessments of each issue, and the most likely answer is, the books get better as they go on.

What a wicked cool tentacle hell demon monster thing that was chasing Nny's victims throughout this issue. Nny has some "final" moments toward the end that are pretty epic. This was great on an early Tim Burton sort of level. Dark, but satirical and evil-ly funny. I am definitely glad I kept on reading for this issue ... I reaaaally hope this trend continues in the next issue.

JTHM is not just about gore it is also quite philosophical. All the issues are filled with monologues and witty comments here and there.

Johnny hates mankind cause mankind always hated him and at the end there was nothing to love about mankind in general anyway so why not get rid of it little by little?
