Blake has kept busy, working with FEMA and Governors helping them kickstart relief efforts in a more humane manner and fix the upcoming problems of winter. The new Governor throws a monkey wrench at Blake and has to reminded him that he's almost finished with his sentence handed down by the President.

Michael and King are still travelling together. Working as sappers and guerilla fighters, they slow the advance of the invasion. Another great story from Boyd Craven! This is the ninth book in 'The World Burns' series and the action keeps rolling.

Blake is finishing his work with setting up other camps as successfully as his own, but can't wait to return to a very pregnant Sandra. John Norton and his crew continue to chip away at the invading caliphate, much to their displeasure. Michael and King are gathering as much intel as they can when a surprising twist is revealed to them... Different groups who might be working together?

This story was a quick read for me in a single evening as progress is made and more obstacles arise. I can't wait for another installment in this fantastic series. Well done!

Wow

The plot keeps getting better and better. Enjoying this series maybe because it sounds believable. The new characters introduced in each book get integrated into the story with each passing book making you wonder what the others are doing. The quirky survival tips are great too. Looking forward to the next book.

Agony of the World - The World Burns Series

As always I read these way to fast or they are just too short! I love this storyline and I always anxiously await the next installment and it never fails that Craven leaves you on a cliffhanger at the end. I like that some old storylines have become new again this time, revived.
