Debbie Oxier says

This was a nice romance. Lauren was shy and reserved but she knew her way around a computer. Matt has come home to help his ailing father with his company. When he finds some discrepancies in the records he calls on Lauren to help him find who's responsible. Both of them have reasons for not wanting to get involved but the attraction between them continues to grow with every minute they spend together.

This was a quick read, I breezed through it. The story takes place in Australia which was interesting and the characters were people you could easily relate to, especially Lauren with her reservations about fitting in. It was sweet the way Matt went out of his way to help her.

Liked the premise and was excited to read something set in Adelaide, but I found the pacing slow, the writing was stilted at times, and the headswapping was frustrating. This was a DNF for me.
