Emily says

A collection of letters, arranged by topic, from women around the country to the United States Children's Bureau. A historical treasure detailing women's concerns as they became mothers between World War I and the end of the 1920's. From child death to diet to a vigorous discussion on why "marking" a baby by looking at something foul during pregnancy is a superstition, Molly Ladd-Taylor's choice of letters is broad and includes poor, middle class, urban, rural, upset, preachy and thankful. A fantastic and informative read.
