Calamity Mom by Diana Palmer

A mom for all calamities . . . that was what Faulkner Scott's young son wanted. The motherless twelve-year-old was determined to appoint Shelly Astor his new mom after she saved his life. Then she met his dad! Who was going to save Shelly's heart from a new accident waiting to happen --- like falling in love with the boy's gorgeous father?

The Apartment by Debbie Macomber

No matter that Hilary Sullivan was twenty-four years old, played flute for the Portland Symphony and had her own apartment --- Hilary's mother was overprotective. So how was Hilary going to convince her that mother didn't know best when it came to having a macho army fly-boy for a roommate?

A Special Request by Judith Duncan

Sarah Jeffrie's son didn't want much --- just a dog and a dad. Nat Anderson had the dog --- and he'd be a prime candidate for dadhood, except Nat was just passing through. Sarah refused to fall for a sexy smile, but Nat wasn't leaving till he fulfilled her son's special request.

Three touching, romantic stories celebrate the joys and surprises of motherhood, including ""A Special Request,"" in which Sarah Jeffries meets sexy Nat Anderson but thinks that he is too much of a wanderer to be a father to her son.

Dixie-Lee Campbell says

I only read 'The Apartment' by Debbie Macomber.... will go back to the other stories later on.
I loved this book and could not put it down. Enjoyed the story and how it unfolded and how it ended!

Didn't care much for the first book, but the other two I liked a lot. :)

Found this book in one of my many boxes (was looking for some lighthearted reading on Friday night). Sweet stories - not profound, but enjoyable reading at the end of the work week. The fact that this book came out in 1993 is very apparent - the attitudes towards sex changed a lot (and not for the better).

I loved it even though each stories, personally to me, is a bit too short. What I enjoyed the most is definitely Calamity Mom by Diana Palmer. I loved it, very typical of Diana's story and it's been a while since the last time I read her story. Good one!
