Will the barnyard animals trick—or treat—Farmer Brown? Find out in this Halloween tale from the #1 New York Times bestselling creators of Click, Clack, Moo.

Farmer Brown does not like Halloween. So he draws the shades, puts on his footy pajamas, and climbs into bed.

But do you think the barnyard animals have any respect for a man in footy pajamas? No, they do not. For them, the Halloween party has just begun. And we all know these critters far prefer tricks over treats.

There are big surprises in store for Farmer Brown!

It's Halloween, and Farmer Brown retreats to his house, frightened of everything to do with the holiday. The animals on his farm, by contrast, are having a blast at their party in the barn. The crunch-crunch-crunching of the mice, as they scurry across the field to the party; the creak-creak-creaking of the sheep, as they open the barn door; the tap-tap-tapping of the cats, as they knock for admittance - all of it keeps the good farmer up. But when he hears a knocking at his door, and then a suspicious quacking, he decides to investigate, finding himself a surprise prize-winner at the party...

Like so many of its predecessors, Click, Clack, Boo! is a humorous, goodhearted delight of a picture-book, pairing an engaging tale from author Doreen Cronin with appealing artwork from illustrator Betsy Lewin. The animals on Farmer Brown's farm continue to amuse, with their independent ways, and scheming Duck (always my favorite character!), manages to once again inveigle Farmer Brown into his plans. I continue to enjoy these stories about the animals of Farmer Brown's barnyard, which is no small feat, considering that this is the eleventh title I have read in the series. Recommended to anyone looking for fun Halloween picture-books, as well as to those who have enjoyed other stories about these characters.

Farmer Brown does not like Halloween. Jack o'lanterns are creepy, witches are frightening, and the crunch, crunch, crunching of their feet on the lawn, the creak, creak, creaking of the barn door, and the tap, tap, tapping on the window make the holiday even more scary. The animals like it, though, and cook up a Halloween party in the barn.

This benign offering will satisfy young ones, but it lacks the humor of the original, Click, Clack, Moo.

Cute book, but I was disappointed with it. It's nowhere as clever as other books in the series. My pre-schooler enjoyed it, but she's not asked to read it again (unlike other books in the series).

Peacegal says

Seems like a forgettable cash-in in comparison with the delightfully witty "Click, Clack Moo."

This is one of my all time favorite children books. It's a classic and Doreen Cronin makes this Halloween tale fun for all ages. I teach third grade and I read this to the kids every year and they love it. We make up motions for all the onomatopoeia's that are throughout the book every year and we do them every time they come up. We also use this book to talk about Halloween and why Farmer Brown doesn't like Halloween. We come up with ideas on how to help him get over his fears on Halloween which hits the social and emotional aspects of our standards. The students come up with ideas of playing board games at home, going to Church trunk or treating, meet up with a group of friends and simply just teaching Farmer Brown that Halloween is make believe. I thought my first year teaching third grade this book would be "not cool" enough for the kids but boy was I wrong. I love how you can get the class actively involved with hand or body motions. I also use this book as a great way to introduce what an onomatopoeia is and we practice using them in our Halloween writing later in the week. Great book and I would recommend it to any K-3rd grade elementary school teachers!

The series started with Click, Clack, Moo, and has continued with several sequels. Each one is well done in both text and illustrations. Doreen and Betsy compliment each other. This sequel centers around Halloween and includes the usual characters--the farm animals and the farmer and of course the ring leader, duck. The farmer is not a fan of Halloween, is afraid of it and plans isolate himself under the covers in his bed after leaving a bowl of candy on the porch with a note "DO NOT DISTURB." When he hears strange noises he goes to the door and discovers that the farm animals are having a Halloween party in the barn. He goes to investigate and....

Not quite the complete story of the original Click, Clack, Moo but still a serviceable, fun, and richly illustrated Halloween themed follow up. Farmer Brown does not enjoy Halloween but that will not stop the barn dwelling animals from celebrating. Again, a work my children enjoyed and while not the classic of the original, this is a fun enough holiday tie in that my kids recall and ask for throughout the year.

Stephanie H (My Bookish Itinerary) says

This is a fun story to read. I found it to be very cute!

We have our lovable farm animals and Farmer Brown returning to us in a fun Halloween tale. Farmer Brown is afraid of Halloween. He does not like it. So he puts out a bowl of candy and a Do Not Disturb sign and turns in for the night. Then he hears creepy, spooky noises coming from outside. Meanwhile, the barn yard animals are having a Halloween Party in the barn. Dressed up in costumes, they are arriving (making noises) to the party.

The pictures are wonderful. I love the watercolors. And I think that they do an awesome job showing the story.

I think that this story is best for younger children, probably Pre-K through 3rd grade. But most elementary students would probably find something to enjoy. My daughters found the book to be cute and funny. They laughed a lot (especially at the ending.) I like that this is a fun Halloween story that is not too scary for younger kids.

Alex (not a dude) Baugh says

It's Halloween and Farmer Brown doesn't like it. He puts out a bowl of candy on the porch, locks up the house and puts out a "Do Not Disturb" sign, then he goes to bed. Little does he know that while the animals in his barn love Halloween and are having a party, a dark, spooky creature is heading towards Farmer Brown's house. When Farmer Brown hears a tap, tap, tapping on the front door, he opens it and sees the bowl of candy is gone. But there's a note on the door, and there's lots of noise coming from the barn. What could his barnyard animals be up to on Halloween night? A big surprise for Farmer Brown?

This is a fun Halloween book, especially for kids who might be a little nervous about all the costumes, and decorations associated with it. The text is lighthearted, with repetitious sound words adding to the spookiness throughout the story. Lewin's watercolor illustrations, in the colors of Halloween, along with her goofy costumed animals add to the fun of Farmer Brown's big surprise at the end.

It's been awhile since I enjoyed the rest of the books in this series, so I can't do a direct comparison of quality. But this reads just fine as a stand-alone, I believe. And so much fun... especially if read aloud, of course.

I do recall that some of the others were for older children, with political & economic themes. This, otoh, is fun for pre-school, maybe even toddlers.

(I really need to be reminded of child development progression and milestones as I'm just not sure how sophisticated a three yo is... does she know what dressing up in a costume is?)

Anthony says

Farmer Brown, who doesn't like Halloween, is summoned to the barn to investigate strange noises and finds a big surprise in store waiting for him.

Shiloah says

So cute!

Archit Ojha says

Farmer Brown's animals are absolutely ready for the Halloween Party. Farmer Brown was never interested in such activities. Barnyard animals do not care. They'll have their share of fun.

The surprise that awaits for Brown is worth reading.

Vern says

Very cool. I kinda look like the farmer. Need to remember for potential Halloween costume.

Paula says

I love this series, but this book isn't as good as the rest.
